VIGILANCE OF GUARDS AT CAMP KEYES RESULTS IN CAPTURE ALLEGED BOOTLEGGER

Maurice Darnen of This City Had Automobile With Supply of Highly Potent Home Brewed Beer—To Face Court Today

The authorities at Camp Keyes, where some 1200 National Guardsmen and regular troops of the 5th U. S. Infantry are in camp for fifteen days intensive field training, have been especially vigilant in the matter of bootleggers peddling liquor in or about the camp, and on several nights suspicion has been aroused to the extent that each new Officer of the Day had direct instructions from Colonel Harry M. Bigelow of the 103rd Infantry to have the guards make special efforts to apprehend the purveyors of contraband.
Last evening Captain Robert P. Millett, of B company, Officer of the Day, captured a young man as he attempted to smuggle a quantity of liquor with one of the guardsmen. The alleged bootlegger was taken into custody on the highway outside the reservation to the North was located his automobile, which were some half dozen quart bottles filled with home brewed beer.
The prisoner was taken to the Kennebec county jail under armed guard, where he gave his name as Maurice Darnen of this city. He was held at the jail last night and will probably be arraigned in municipal court this morning on charges growing out of his activities at the military camp.

Colonel Bigelow declared last evening that his officers will wage an active campaign against this sort of thing, and that charges will be pressed to any and all who are caught trafficking in liquor with the members of his regiment.
On Tuesday night, Captain Dan S. Dexter of Co. E, of Lewiston was Officer of the Day, and his vigilance in the matter of bootlegging, almost resulted in the capture of a civilian, whom it was believed was engaged in dispensing liquor.

With the increased power in radio broadcasting the past few months has come excellent reception for local fans. While the volume at times has been poor, on a whole conditions have been very good. The old idea that there was nothing good to be had over the radio in the summer season is no more, as there are always some good stations on the air with very fine programs.
The past winter, as fans will recall, was very discouraging. Night after night but little could be had, and that came through poorly. Even with the increased power used by WGY and WJZ they were at times out of reach. Much stress has been laid on the very prominent spots during the past winter. Radio reception has led to the conclusion that they were the direct cause of the poor winter's reception.
While the existing changes which have been made by a number of stations in going to other wave lengths, there has been some difficulty in locating them, but there has been an improvement in the results. The ground stations which have made the changes, WNAAC, for one, has taken 425 meters as their wave length, which has brought them out of the congested section and has been coming in much better. There has been less interference to both the reception of the programs, which have been very interesting from the start.

It does not seem probable that there will be any further changes in station wave lengths, at least for the present. There is no better time for local radio fans to go over their aerial systems than at the present. Dirt removed from insulators, or new wire put up. The best antenna has been found to be one where enameled seven strand copper wire is used. The ground connections should be examined and cleaned and all connections made secure. All lead-ins should be collected to a roof and lightning arresters well grounded on the outside of the building, at least six inches from it. With the proper installation of a good grade arrester there is no danger should lightning bother the aerial.

Mason-Dixon Line
H. G. Dwight, for some years connected with the Department of State says in "The Yale Review" that the famous Mason and Dixon's Line between Pennsylvania and Maryland dates from 1767.

"When it was completed in 1767 that Maryland and Pennsylvania were slave colonies. In time Pennsylvania, emancipated her slaves and Maryland adhered to the Southern system. During the fifty years preceding the firing on Sumter the original idea of the line was completely obliterated and the thought of it as not the boundary between two states, but as the boundary between the slave states and the free states," says Mr. Dwight.
"It happened some 250 years ago that Charles I, Charles II and James II all had assigned as the line of demarcation between two royal grants the one to William Penn and the other to Baron Baltimore a parallel of latitude which actually ran a trifle to the north of the City of Brotherly Love which Mr. Penn had laid out. There was much bickering over the situation.

After several years the proprietors, already having agreed to throw overboard the fortieth parallel, finally agreed to send over from England for the accurate laying down of a boundary line, two "mathematicians." And these were the Mason and Dixon for whom the line is named. Little is known of Dixon, but Mason had been assistant to the astronomer, royal, and with Dixon had explored already St. Helena and the Cape of Good Hope.
"With their arrival at Philadelphia in 1763 there began the five most adventurous years of their lives. Sandwiched in between the mysterious symbols and the arithmetical calculations of the old journal there are many records of experiences in the wilderness. They made their start thus: The boundary should follow a parallel running fifteen miles south of the most southerly point of Philadelphia, and that point lies now on the lower side of South street with the city all round it! Then they drew an arc around the spire of the courthouse at New Castle, in Delaware, with a radius of twelve miles.

"Next, from a certain point on Chesapeake Bay, they laid out a straight line east and west, and from the 'middle point' of that line they laid off a tangent to the New Castle arc. And then—from the point of tangency a meridian was to be run northward until it cut the parallel fifteen miles south of Philadelphia." And that intersection, "royal patents or no royal patents," was to be the irrevocable limit of my Lord Baltimore's jurisdiction!"

First American Flag "at Sea"
It is perhaps little known that the first American flag displayed "at sea" was raised by Colonel Wynnkoop, commander of the Royal Weymouth fleet in Lake Champlain, in 1776. This flag was a replica of the first striped flag, hoisted over Washington's headquarters at Cambridge. It consisted of thirteen alternate red and white stripes in the field and retained the colors of England, the crossed anchors of George III. and Andrew on a blue ground, in the canton. This flag was known in England as "The Rebellious Stripes."
"A picturesque incident is told of the first stars and stripes used in a military engagement," said Mr. Ames, foremost flag manufacturer in the country. "The revolutionary flag of thirteen stripes, with a circle of thirteen stars was adopted by the Continental Congress on June 14, 1777, but the statute was not officially promulgated until the 3d of the following September. Meanwhile a copy of an Albany newspaper describing the flag had fallen under the eye of a Continental officer from Massachusetts on his way with reinforcements to Fort Schuyler, formerly Fort Stanwix, where the city of Rome, New York, now stands.
"He arrived at 5 P. M. on August 2nd and very opportunely, too, as it turned out. For the British attacked the fort the following morning, which was Sunday. Before the end of the day the garrison had run up the first American battle flag. White stripes from shirts and hospital bandages alternated with red stripes made from the scarlet petticoat of a soldier's wife. A blue canton was improvised from the military coat of one Captain Abraham Swartout, who, a year later, wrote to the commander of the fort requesting 'an order on the commissary to supply me as promised, with eight yds. of broadcloth in lieu of my blue coat which was used for Colors at Fort Schuyler.'—From Everybody's Magazine.

Empire of the Mayas
As early as the second century after Christ there was a substantial civilization under way in Central America. By 400 A. D. this civilization had grown into the powerful and competent and essentially civilized empire of the Mayas.
The great mystery of the Mayan civilization is that of its calendar. As early as 300 A. D. and possibly much earlier, the Mayas had developed a method of reckoning time which is quite as accurate and convenient as our own. The problem of adjusting the length of the year to the uneven number of days which it contains had been solved. The complete Mayan calendar is capable of fixing any given date exactly and uniquely in a period of over five million years.
This calendar, and the mass of astronomical knowledge which must lie back of it, appeared in Central America suddenly. No history has been traced for its origin. One century it is not there; the next century it is there. Where did the Mayas calendar come from? Who invented it? Where and when and how, did patient astronomers make the centuries of laborious observations which must have been at hand before the final calendar could have been formulated? No one knows. Some experts believe that the Mayas culture was imported, possibly from India or from Egypt. Others believe that it originated in America, at sites not yet discovered, or that its relics, being perishable, have disappeared.—E. E. Free in the Forum.

Woman's Need for Man
The modern young woman must realize that her man, she is violently attracted to him, and that on the whole her need for him is greater than his need for her. The fatal desire for a man can be the crown of a man's life, his incentive to action, his inspiration, has to be cleaned out of her mind.
Women may have been an incentive to action for certain types of men, but that is a different statement. The desire for woman has indeed driven men to robberies, piracy, gambling, insurrections, conquests, striping, possessions, waylaying and forestalling. Women has been able to make a price and obliged men to find it—and so brought herself under the obligation of a purchased article. But no man has ever done any great creative thing, painted splendidly, organized an industry, set a land in order, invented machines, built lovely buildings, primarily for the sake of a woman.
These things can only be done well and fully for their own sakes; they require the unobscured egoism we call self-realization. Some have prevented and thwarted the self-realization of men, and others have protected and aided men, but from first to last they have been accessory.—H. G. Wells, Hearst's International-Cosmopolitan.

Garden Disaster
Paris, (P)—Rotted buds and stunted flowers on the rose bushes were found at the celebrated rose garden of Hay les Roses by those who made the annual pilgrimage there this year. The rose garden of the city of Paris at Bagatelle in the Bois de Boulogne is in the same condition; the jury that presides over the annual contest of new varieties of roses there has decided that no prizes shall be distributed this year. Prolonged rain, after prolonged cold, are the causes of the garden disaster.
Roses cultivated commercially for perfume or for the essence of roses were also affected by unfavorable weather conditions, although less than the garden varieties, because they are mostly cultivated in the south where the weather was less severe.

Reward for Kindness
In 1923 a "timber-topper" running in the grand Lepine steeplechase fell and injured a leg, says "The Pathfinder." When he was ordered shut his English trailer, who did not have the heart to do the deed, bought him for $4. For many months the horse was carefully nursed until it returned to health and vigor. Then the horse was entered in steeplechase races in Germany, and he has won. He has brought back $26,000 to his owner.
